Miguel Montano HEP/CAMP Journal Week 5

Family and Friends

I feel that throughout the week I did a good job at working the front office. I can open and set up the office correctly and the way it is expected of me. I greeted everyone respectfully and with a big smile on my face. I answered the phone calls correctly and assisted the caller the best that I could. I am much quicker at running errands for the office. I know how to sort the mail correctly and give the mail to the correct staff member. I can attend a hearing and take good notes for the Legislative Assistants; and most importantly I feel comfortable with any project given to me. I'm not a person to brag but let's just say that I can do just about everything that is asked of me throughout the office. It is a great feeling to know that I understand how to do my job within the office. My job in the office isn't the most difficult job by all means, but I always have something to do and never complain with what is asked of me.

This weekend was nothing more than a weekend of errands. I did not get to enjoy the city as much as I would have wanted too, partly because I needed to get some groceries, items for the room and personal time to myself. With the personal time that I took to myself I went jogging, got a haircut, and bought some gifts for family and friends from back home. The weekend was nothing to exciting, but a weekend much needed.

At this point, I would say I'm home sick, and really do miss my family. My grandma's birthday was this last Thursday, so my family is back at home celebrating her special day with her for the weekend. I was not lying when I said that I am very close to my family, and family oriented. I cannot wait for next week as I will finally get to see some special people from back home.
