

Magali – Week 6

I didn't know what to expect from the HEP/CAMP conference but I learned a lot. What I liked the most were the workshop sessions. I found the ones I sat in were really interesting about the Higher Education Act and Geographic Distribution of Projects. We, as interns, really don't know how much of hard work the Association puts in for this organization to keep running. Throughout the conference I learned a lot and appreciated way more what they do for.

Another favorite part of the conference for me was when elected CAMP students came and told us their story. Lisa Ramirez gave her remarks saying that sometimes even though those stories are heartbreaking, we need to hear them to motivate us. Because sometimes work gets tough and you may feel like quitting but you know you're doing the right thing for kids out there who don't have a lot of support. This could be there one thing that keeps them going. That little part impacted me so much because I think it's so true. Sometimes when I'm in class and it gets hard I feel like quitting but I need to look at my end goal and realize that it will help many people in the future. We need to be reminded that everything we are doing is to better our systems education and fr the future leaders of this world.

Last Thursday was such an amazing day! I went to an event called the Make Progress National Summit 2015. The event was based on teaching the millennial generation to make progressive change in our time. Featuring amazing leaders like Nancy Pelosi, Elizabeth Warren, Thomas Perez, the VP Joe Biden, and many more House members. All their speeches really motivated me into wanting better not only for me and my family but the whole world. Everyone deserves an equal opportunity.

So that was pretty amazing because I got to shake Joe Bidens hand! Ahh

I also went for a white tour! And now that we're allowed to take picture it was very exciting!

It was a pretty great week, like always!

P.S. The blue room is my favorite room.
